

DISCOMFORTS OF FACE-TO-FACE ENGLISH TEACHING IN TALISAY CITY COLLEGE

Mr. Helmer B. Montejo
Talisay City College, the Philippines

ABSTRACT

Face-to-face set up pushes us to leave our comfort zone which also means growth. There is definitely an adjustment period but when you come to appreciate getting back to school again, we become more productive and also learn beyond the academics. Face-to-face is a human reconnection, mental, and emotional refreshment. Talisay City College English instructors may have faced discomforts with the resumption of limited face-to-face but the drive to truly impart what is best for the students is very evident as they sail through and amidst the discomforts they have encountered. English instructors find face-to-face classes better than online classes because it allowed students to focus more and understand the lessons better.

The researcher is one of the advisers of Global Educators Network Teachers of English as a Foreign Language (GENTEFL). He is a member of several reputable research organisations namely Asia Pacific Consortium of Researchers and Educators (APCORE), International Cross-cultural Exchange and Professional Development - Thailand (ICEPD-Thailand), and Asian Studies Association of Australia (ASAA). He has presented in different national and international conferences and was able to publish his works in different reputable journals. At present, he is the Associate Dean, Research Director, and Language

Coordinator of Talisay City College.